Great Grandmother Launches a $4 Million Malpractice Lawsuit against Hospital and Introduces ProjectVoice™ to Empower Elderly Through Charitable Endeavors.

(Toronto, ON - April 15, 2023) - Patricia Canie, a 93-year-old great-grandmother, has launched a $4 million malpractice lawsuit against a hospital and its staff, alleging subpar care during her 2020 hospital stay, which resulted in an aphasic stroke which is similar to the problem that also caused Bruce Willis to end his acting career because he too had to struggle hard to speak.

The lawsuit is being supported by her son Joseph Canie, a retired paralegal and caregiver for Patricia. If the case is won or settled, the Canies' intend to use the funds to support ProjectVoice™, a charitable initiative which they co-founded aimed at empowering elderly hospital patients to speak up and voice their concerns and needs.

"We know firsthand how difficult it was to get proper care and attention in a hospital, and we want to help others who may go through the same thing," said Joseph Canie.

ProjectVoice™ will provide resources and support through registered foundations and charities to help the Elderly get the care they need and deserve.

"As our population ages, it's more important than ever to ensure that our elderly receive the best possible care," said Patricia Canie former "Spokesperson" for the game SkrAtch™. "Although the stroke has seriously affected my ability to talk and I can no longer speak well there is nothing wrong with my mind! A while I can no longer act as "Spokesperson" in the launch of SkrAtch™ "The Line Extension" As co-founder of ProjectVoice™ 2023 "I hope that we can make a difference for other elderly patients who were or are struggling in hospitals" said Patricia Canie."

Joseph Canie is no stranger to successful lawsuits. He previously sued four lotteries in four Canadian provinces for $41 million and the court found that the lotteries had committed civil conspiracy. He is co-inventor of the original game SkrAtch™ which sold 3 million units in 5 countries at a MSRP of $5.95 CAD.
